FARM AND GARDEN

SWEET SORGHUMS.

Goose-neck Variety Lately Revived.

By CHARLES H. BARK.

Goose-neck sorghum is very distinct from any other variety now grown in this country. It is probably a direct descendant, with little or no variation, of one of the original imported African varieties.

It was widely known among sorghum planters from 1870 to 1890 and is said to have been a leading variety in some parts of the south, but in recent years has become almost unknown. The sorghum so extensively advertised in Texas during the past two years under the name of ribbon cane proves on investigation to be only the goose-neck sorghum under a new name.

The goose-neck is the largest of our sorghum varieties. It grows commonly from ten to twelve feet high and where sown thinly for strip making the stalks are from one to one and a half or two inches in diameter at the butt. In fields observed in Texas this variety stood up very well, showing little tendency to lodge under the influence of winds. The lower part of the stem usually becomes red in color. The heads at maturity are nearly all soaked and almost black in color. They range from five to nine inches in length and from three to five inches in width. This variety is much later than Amber and a week to ten days later than Orange and Sunset sorghums. It cannot be safely grown, therefore, north of the latitude of Washington and St. Louis. South of that line it is likely to become a favorite yield, being much less on account of its later date and large field of juice. Its greater height and stouter stalks are not likely to command it as a variety over the others not grown for that purpose.

The Orange sorghum is of the South African origin and differs from the Amber, Sunset and larger and more abundant in color. The seed heads also are heavier and much more compact than those of the Amber variety.

The Orange sorghum, or Early Orange, as the standard variety is usually called, is somewhat later than the Amber sorghum, requiring usually from two to three weeks longer to reach maturity. It generally grows taller, and this, with the heavier stalks and larger leaves, usually gives it a slightly heavier yield per acre when grown for forage. Various forms of this well known variety are offered on the market at the present time. Among them are the Kansas Orange and the Late Orange.

Rich Seeds' Opinion.

I want to put Mr. William E. Osborn of Indiana on the back for his article "To Get the Most Out of Maize" in the National Stockman and Farmer. Listen. He says: "Personally we have found that for its best results come from scattering maize with the spreader on the young meadow, thereby getting heavy yields of hay, and if pure clover a better seed crop, and following this better corn or potatoes and following these better wheat or oats, with better clover again."

Put a row of stars above and below the above statement. He says there may be a better method of working it. I want to tell him there is not, and farmers are gradually dropping into the procession. It won't be long until they can all hear the band. If we could preserve the natural maize and put it on growing ground in the spring, during the damp season, when the little roots are active and ready to take up the available plant food in the manure, we would do more good with the same quantity of manure.

The Gokstad Ship.

The second oldest sailing craft in the world is the so-called Gokstad ship, a Viking craft which was discovered in a sepulchral mound on the shores of Christiania, Norway and is now exhibited in a wonderfully perfect state of preservation in Christiania. It is a craft of the ninth century A. D.

CARING FOR OUR TREES.

How Their Period of Life May Be Prolonged.

Some valuable information regarding the care and treatment of shade trees is given by N. P. L. Barker, superintendent of the city of Jackson, in an issue of the Baltimore Sun. Barker, a horticulturist in Maryland, says the Baltimore Sun. "When nature has reached a limit of time at which she can sense the vigorating sap over a large space a surgical operation has become necessary for prolonging the life of a tree. Leach, 'The hand must be placed to where the line to which it can easily reach. The operation is a simple one, but not one to be undertaken lightly. After the tree has been cut, however, a little surgery is necessary. The shape of the trunk and the position of the branches must be such that the tree will not be a burden to itself. The proper attention to these things at the right time, however, will insure a long and healthy life. A tree that has no tree can be cut down and should be cut down and moved."

"Why is it necessary to cut a tree in holes and scatter the soil on the surface?" "The hole is needed not to drain that it off by rain or melt, but to roll on the surface. It is not a rule to cut a tree in holes in the spring, but will not wash away. Then far to extend."

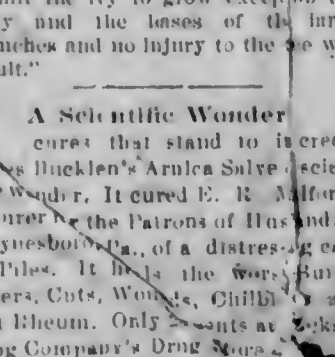

"Take a line and tie it to the tree so that it will be one free end. Then cut the tree from the trunk, leaving the line a few feet and continue to cut a few feet from the tree. Stick holes about four inches deep and about a foot apart on each side. Put about a half cup of lime in each hole. By continuing you find that there are several limbs, and you will readily ascertain the quality of the wood. If you have some good fruit trees which are not bearing, cut off the fruit and carry them to maturity with these holes. They will respond to the treatment and be ready for fruit trees."

"The planting of so called 'bell' trees to climb on young, healthy trees is not to be commended. On the other hand, if old trees having rough, bark, the growth is confined to the trunk of the tree. Any chamber penetrating the trunk to the heart is a disaster, as many suppose, but derives its sustenance from the trunk. You know, if you try to maintain what these holes permit the tree to grow as it grows. If the trees have some vigor you do not permit the tree to grow except on the body and the leaves of the large branches and no injury to the tree will result."

A London Riot Fizzle.

May day's fiasco in Paris recalls the precedent set by London on April 10, 1848, when 200,000 chartists were to have marched on the houses of parliament from Kennington common. Only 20,000 went to Kennington when the day came,
the meetings fizzled out timely, just a few heads were broken, and the monster chartist petition was trundled to Westminster in three cabs. But London's panic and precautions had been quite on the scale of those of Paris in 1906. Troops were in force everywhere, especially at the bridges. The Bank of England and other buildings were crisscrossed with soldiers and artillery and fortified with sandbag parapets and loopholed window barricades.
Above all, 150,000 civilians were sworn in as special constables, including Louis Napoleon.

Attacked

At the Court House Door and Threatened With Death.

I have been threatened with death by a certain man here if I print his name in THE NEWS. It is the province of a newspaper to print the news. If, in so doing, it is necessary to use his name I will do so, just as other people's names are used. All I ask is, if I violate the law, let me be punished by the courts. I am not ready to be assassinated or murdered.

I have been in public life for more than twenty years and have had more or less business with every man in the county, having held a public office a considerable portion of that time, and hold one now by the grace of the good people of this county.

I have never committed a breach of the peace against any one, nor do I go forth armed. I have never been attacked but twice and both of those were made by the same man at the same place; the first nearly five years ago; the other Thursday. Both occurred at the court house door, where every man has a right to feel safe.

NOTICE.

I want to impress upon my friends that unless they pay their taxes in a short time the law compels me to collect a penalty on same. This would be an unpleasant duty for me, so I insist that you pay your taxes immediately and spare me this trouble and yourselves the expense.

Yours Respectfully,

BRECK CRAWFORD, Sheriff.

A reception was tendered Hon. W. J. Bryan at Louisville Wednesday. Leading Democrats from all over the South were there to meet him. More than 22,000 people heard his speech at the Armory Wednesday night.

Miss Annada Frazier, an account of whose illness appeared last week's News, died at the hospital in Lexington last Thursday week ago. Her remains were brought home and buried in the family grave yard, near the mouth of Cane Creek.

H. C. McChesney has been drawn from the race for Auditor in the State primary, giving as his reasons that on account of the high entrance fee it would cost more money to make the race than the salary of the office. It seems that under the new Democracy none but the rich can afford to run for office.

THE NEWS is sorry to note the resignation of Deputy Sheriff S. B. Stillman, which was tendered Breck Crawford, Sheriff of Breathitt county, on last Friday, which was a complete surprise to Mr. Crawford. After a settlement was made Mr. Stillman received a receipt in full for all monies collected by him during his term of office. Mr. Stillman has a better position in view which was the cause of his resigning.

J. L. McCoy, who has been Deputy Collector of this division, with headquarters here, for the past six years, left last Sunday for Richmond, whither he has been transferred and where he will have charge of his new division. Mr. McCoy made many friends here during his stay, having held this position longer than any one before him, and it is with much regret that they see him leave. They, however, wish him much success in his new field.

Louis Howard, who was arrested for the murder of Galen Mann about two years ago, had his examining trial last week before County Judge Taulbee and was held to answer in a bond, which he gave. James Patton was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years at the February term of this court for this crime. The evidence in that trial tended to connect Howard with the crime, but the witness who swore out the warrant was not before the grand jury.

Cooper Declares for Langley.

Judge Archibald P. Cooper, who for years has been the Democratic leader in Magoffin county, has kissed goodbye to Democracy and joined the Republican party. At the Republican county convention held at Salyersville, on August 18, Judge Cooper made a red hot speech denouncing machine politics and declaring his allegiance to the Republican cause. He was made a member of the committee on resolutions and was named as a delegate to the Pikeville convention, but his enfeebled condition prevented his making the trip. Judge Cooper is a brother of Judge John E. Cooper, of Mt. Sterling, and father of C. M. and J. H. Cooper, of this city. He has always been an active Democrat and has been elected to office in Magoffin county several times. He thinks it time honest people condemn the political tactics of such men as Frank Hopkins, and has promised to make a number of speeches for John W. Langley before the campaign ends. The loss of Judge Cooper will cut a big figure in the Democratic vote of Magoffin county, and the Republicans are bent on giving John Langley 800 majority in Magoffin. Paintsville Herald.

Stale a March on Sam Henry.

Love's sweet triumph was again enacted in Lexington Tuesday morning when R. E. Mason, of Bridgeport, Ala., and Miss Lillie Hurst, of Willhurst, Ky., were united in marriage at the home of Rev. I. J. Spencer. The marriage ceremony was performed at nine o'clock Tuesday morning, and the young couple immediately left on the Louisville Southern train for a wedding trip through the South.

The romance, which terminated in an elopement, began some years ago. The groom is a railroad contractor, and while occupied in building a railroad in Eastern Kentucky, he met the girl who is now his bride. It was a case of mutual love, but parental objection prevented their union. Afterward thousands of miles intervened, but the lovers never despaired. Communication was kept up, and at last an agreement was reached whereby they should meet without the knowledge of the bride's parents and their marriage solemnized. As a result the bride left her home ostensibly to visit friends at Winchester, and it was there the groom met her Monday night. They came to Lexington together the same night, and, securing a license, were married Tuesday morning. A married sister of the bride, who had been taken into confidence and had connived at the wedding, was the only witness, and the old adage of where there's a will there's a way again proved to be true.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam H. Hurst and her father is County Court Clerk of Breathitt county. The family occupy a high place in the esteem of their neighbors. The bride is a pretty girl of 23. She was married in her traveling costume. Lexington Leader.

The PILLAR OF LIGHT

By LOUIS TRACY.
Author of "The Wings of the Morning"

CHAPTER XIII.

DISCIPLINE slackened its bonds that night. For one thing, Mr. Brandt fell ill. Although injured to hardship in the elemental life, being of the stocky mariner which holds the Gulf Atlantic in no dread, he had never before been called on to eat sodden bread, to drink condensed cream flavored with fat salt, and to steam-bath from the rind of a raw bacon. These drawbacks, added to the lack of exercise and the constant wearing of clothes not yet dry, placed him on the sick list.

Again there were ominous whispers of unfair division in the matter of food. It was not within the realm of accident that the younger, Constance, and others who helped to appropriate the catables could treat all alike. Some fared better than others in quality if not in quantity. The unfortunate ones growled and talked of fatalities.

A crisis was reached when the second officer mustered the night watch. When one sheep leads the others will follow. A stout German from Chicago asked kindly:

"Vere's de goat of blinyu? at mound-in' gart? Here is bud you ting to kart, und dat is der kitchen."

"Community of interest caused many to huddle closer to him. Here was one who dared to say what they all thought. Their feet shuffled in support. The officer, faithful to his trust, was tempted to tell the man, but he thought the circumstances warranted more gentle methods.

"Why are you dissatisfied?" he sternly demanded. "What do you suspect? Are you fool enough to imagine that you are being cheated by people who are dividing their last crust with you?"

"How do we know dat? Dese gilde dey are chokin' mit Mr. Pyne all der day. Dey can't do dat und be hungry like us."

"You mulligated ass!" said the disgusted officer. "There is food here for three people. They have fed eighty-one of us for two days and will keep us going several more days. Can't you figure it out? Isn't it a miracle? Here! Who's for guard and who not? Let us quit fooling."

"And the doubters were silenced for the hour. The hymn singer endeavored to raise a chorus. He was not greeted with enthusiasm, but a few valiant spirits came to his assistance. A couple of hymns were feebly rendered—and again silence.

"Say when," observed Pyne calmly when he entered the service room to find Brandt trimming the spare lamp.

"Not tonight," said Brandt.

"Why not? Well may break loose at any moment downstairs."

"What has occurred? I heard something of a dispute when the watch mustered at 8 o'clock."

"Things are worse now. One of the men found a gallon of methylated spirit in the workshop."

"Good heavens! Did he drink any of it?"

"He and his mates have emptied the tin. Eight or nine helplessly drunk, the others quarrelsome. The next thing will be a combined rush for the store-room."

"But why did not the second officer tell me?"

"He thought you had troubles enough. If he could depend on the remainder of the crew he would rope the sinners. Says he knows a slave knot that will mull 'em t'ed."

Brandt's eyes glinted.

"The fools," he said, "and just as the weather is mending too?"

"You don't mean that?"

"Listen."

He glanced up at the glass dome. Heavy drops were pattering on it. They looked like spray, but Pyne shouted gleefully:

"Is it rain?"

"Yes. I was just going to summon the watch to help in filling every vessel. If spreading canvas sheets we can gather a large supply if it rains hard. Moreover, it will beat the sea down. Man alive, this may mean salvation! The three weeklings and summer every sober man to help."

With a whoop, Pyne vanished. He met Constance on the stairs, coming to see her father before she stretched her weary limbs on the hard floor of the kitchen.

all as he feebly as lambs tomorrow," said Pyne when he rejoined Brandt after the scurry caused by the rain had passed.

"We must not be too sanguine. There is a chance now. I won't deny that, but the sea is treacherous."

"This reef breaks ere long. At Bar Harbor, in Maine, where a mighty big sea can kick up in a very few hours, I have seen it go down again like magic under a change of wind."

"That is quite reasonable. Any ordinary commotion has room to spread itself in the kitchen. Here the tide is broken up into ocean rivers, streams with boundaries as definite as the Thames. The main body sweeps up into the bottle neck of the channel. Another tributary comes round the north of the Sicily Isles and runs into the tidal stream again, exactly at this point. The result often is that, while little pleasure boats can safely run out into the bay from Penzance, there is a race over the rock that would break up a stranded battleship."

"Say, do you like this kind of life?"

"I have given my best years to it. Pyne was smoking a pipe, one which Brandt lent him. The tobacco was a capital substitute for food, especially as he had established a private understanding with Elsie and Maudie that they were to waity him when possible and muddle a piece of blacuit in current in his pocket."

This arrangement was to be kept a strict secret from all, especially from Miss Constance and Miss Enid, while the little ones themselves did not know that she, the dragons whom Pyne feared so greatly gave them surreptitious doses from the last tin of condensed milk, retained for their exclusive benefit.

"Do you mind my saying that you're a good bit of an enigma?" he hazarded between puffs.

"It may be so, but I like the service."

"Just so. I was never so happy as when I took a trip as fourth engineer on a tramp in the Gulf of Florida. But that didn't signify being tied to a long nosed oiler for the remainder of my days."

"Are you a marine engineer?" inquired Brandt, with some show of interest.

"I hold a certificate just for fun. I had a mechanical twist in me and gave it play. But I am an idler by profession."

The lighthouse keeper laughed so naturally that the younger man was gratified. Polite disbeliever may be a compliment.

"An idler, eh? You do not strike me as properly classed."

"It's the fact, nevertheless. My grandfather was pleased to invest a few dollars in real estate on the sheep farm where Manhattan avenue now stands. My uncle has half; my mother had the other half."

"Are both of your parents dead?"

"Yes; years ago; lost at sea, too, on my father's yacht."

"What a terrible thing!"

"It must have been something like that. I was only six years old at the time. My uncle lost his wife and child, too, when the Esmeralda went down. It nearly killed him. I never thought he'd marry again, but I suppose he's tired of being alone."

"Probably. By the way, now that you mention it, Mrs. Vansittart wished to see me yesterday. I could not spare a moment, so I sent her a civil message, saying that Constance told her she knew me."

"Hardly likely," smiled Pyne, "if you have passed nearly the whole of your life in lighthouses."

"I did not quite mean to convey that impression. I knew a man of her late husband's name, many years ago."

"She is a nice woman in some ways," said Pyne reflectively. "Not quite my sort, perhaps, but a lady all the time. She is not an American. Came to the States about '90, I think, and lost her hubby on a ranch in California. Anyhow, the old man is dead stuck on her, and they ought to hit it off well together. The Vansittarts you knew didn't happen to marry a relative of yours?"

"Odd thing," mused Pyne. "It has just occurred to me that she resembles your daughter—your elder daughter—not so much in face as in style. Same sort of graceful figure, only a trifle smaller."

"Such coincidences often happen in the human family. For instance, you are not wholly unlike Enid."

"Hilly gee," said Pyne, "I'm too run down to stand fattery!"

"Likeness is often a matter of environment. Characteristics, mannerisms, the subtle distinctions of class and social rank, soak in through the skin quite as sensibly as they are conferred by heredity. Take the plowman's son and rear him in a royal palace, turn the infant prince into a peasant, and who shall say when they reach man's estate, 'This is the true king? You will remember it was said of the Emperor Augustus, Urban lateritia in vent, marmoreum reliquit (he found the milk-trick; he left it muddled). The same principle may be obtained in every healthy child properly educated."

The college bred youth had not entered into any general conversation with Brandt before. He had the tact now to conceal his astonishment at the manner of his friend's speech.

"You told her all that to the winds, then?" he asked.

Brandt rose to his feet, as was his way when deeply moved.

"Thank God, yes," he cried. A faint hoot came to them through the chortling of the wind.

"One of our visitors," shouted Brandt, "and here we are gossiping as though snugly seated in armchairs at the fire-side."

much. "Thus far the habitation of the light-house had been given quite enough nutriment to maintain life. There was no reason why any, even the most delicate, should be in real danger during the next forty-eight hours. But scientific reasoning and the actual instincts of mankind clash at times; in that lay the danger whose shadow was deepening the lines in the corners of Brandt's eyes.

Every hour the officer on duty and some men of the watch visited him to report that all was well below. Some of the less drunken multitudes were pitifully sober now; the others were muddled. Beyond the few words exchanged on this and kindred topics he was left alone with his thoughts throughout the silent watch. Pyne slept heavily. Glancing at times at the youngster's stalwart figure and firm, handsome face, Brandt found himself revivifying the lurid years. He thought of the days when he, too, looked forth on the world with the stern enthusiasm of triumphant youth.

Long forgotten ghosts were resurrected, shivered ideals built up again. He wondered, if the decades rolled back, would he decide a second time to abandon the fine career which lay at his feet and withdraw his grief into the seclusion of lonely rocks and silent headlands.

He had been happy, as men count happiness, during the decades. No cloud had arisen to mar the complete content of his life. The blossoming of the girls into beautiful womanhood was an increasing joy to him, and it was passing strange that his little household should be plunged into a whirlpool of events in the very hour when their domesticity seemed to be just assured. The changed mood of the elements found no counterpart in his nature. He, knowing the sea, did not expect it to remain fixed in one aspect. Whether in calm or storm, the contrary would surely happen ere many days had passed. But life was a different thing. How came it that at the very close of so many years of association with the tickle-ocean she should play such a trick on him and his daughters, infold them with perils, launch them from the quiet pleasure of the life they had planned for the future and thrust upon them, even if they escaped with their lives, a publicity which, at any rate, abhorred and even dreaded?

He harbored no delusions on this point. He knew that the drama of the Gulf Coast was now filling the columns of newspapers all over the world. He and his beloved girls would be written about, discussed, described in columns of language, pictured as black and white artists and collected to wide awake editors eager to make much of a topic dear to the public mind.

On the rock they were undoubtedly in grave danger. Death confronted them—death at once extraordinary and ghastly. No tyrant of the middle ages, with all his paraphernalia for wringing truth or lies out of cowering wretches, had devised such a fate as threatened if the inconstant sea should choose to render the reef altogether unapproachable for many days. Yet if help came he and those dear to him were already steeped in unavoidable notoriety, bringing in its train certain vague disabilities which he had striven to avoid for over twenty years.

And all this because one fierce gale out of the many he had endured sprang into being at a moment when his mates were incapacitated and his daughters happened to pay him a surprise visit.

"It is an insane freak of fortune," he muttered, "so inconceivable, so utterly out of focus with common events, that if I were a superstitious man I should regard it as betokening the approach of some great epoch in my life. Surely, a merciful Providence would not bring my girls here to subject them to the lingering torture of hunger and thirst. I must not think of it further. That way lies madness."

There was at least one other troubled soul on the rock which divided some sinister portent in the storm. Mrs. Vansittart, even at this moment, was staring into the black void with questioning eyes.

He resolutely threw back his head as if he would hurl the outer darkness and the gibbering phantoms which whispered these words of foreboding. Although the lamp needed no attention just then, he climbed to the trimming stage merely to fluff relief in mechanical action. He carefully examined the adjustment, and, to judge how the weather was shaping, went out into the gallery to look at the distant lights.

The three quick flashes of the Seven Stones lights were very clear. That was a good sign. The wind came from that quarter, and, blustering though it was, driving gigantic waves before it into the loud entrance of the reef, it maintained the good promise of the last few hours.

Seeking the comparative shelter of the east side, he gazed steadily at the lizards. Its two fixed electric beams, nearly in line with the Gulf track, were dull and watery. A local squall of rain was sweeping down from the land. Changeable, threatening, unsettled—the meteorologist might apply any of these terms to the prevalent conditions.

Far out in the channel he saw the twinkling masthead lights of several steamers. How high or low, malle must travel and were put to sea. On such a night at this time he would re-enter the lighthouse with a cheery sense of its comfort and homelike aspect. Now he drew the brilliant interior of the service room. Its garish light reflected on the patient misery, the useless redness, the ineffectual stupor which bedded beneath. If he and those committed to his charge were to be saved either the sea must be still or another parcel of the waves and fishes enact.

There, alone on the gallery, amid the din of howling wind and waves, he heard the faint, heeded to be apart, on off from the feelings within. He lifted his eyes the sadder arch of the heavens. He said the age of miracles had passed. "May God it might not be so?"

When Brandt went of the sudden rush of cold air through a little door leading to the balcony passed Pyne. That young gentleman was rarely awakened from a dreamy slumber. He was clinging to the railing of an enormous kiosk, which had been made to hover over the rock by a green hup seated in an absurdly odd seat.

They were solemnly asked by other guests, lugs with sparkling, toothlike eyes, to intrust themselves to this precarious means of escape, but the present they dropped off a ledge of the gallery they were to be used the kiosk to sweep down the reef, a resistant change to the sea and a desperate farewell shriek was nothing more terrifying than the chattering and whistling of the air current whirled by Brandt, but Pyne did not yet go to sleep again. He did not yet forget the dead spirits which whirled in unpleasant escapades.

He straightened his stiff limbs and sat up.

He was about to knock for the kiosk, but he hesitated. He was in such a fashion when he saw a woman's head and shoulders emerging out of the stairway.

At first he thought it was Constance, and he wondered why she should be here in the deep of the night. But the visitor paused a moment, then her waist was on a level with his.

She uttered a little cry.

"You changed your mind, didn't you?" she said, looking at him.

"No, Mrs. Vansittart, I am an assistant keeper, and I must stay all the time with the kiosk. What in the name of good fortune is the lady here?"

"I am here," she said, "because I should have remained about. I am here to see you here. Where is Brandt?"

"Does he go out at night to trim the light?" she asked.

"Yes, but he is a bit of a duffer. I can see you a chair. Mr. Brandt wants to see you, and this is a quiet time for a chat."

"How does he know me? What did he say?"

Mrs. Vansittart pressed her left hand to her breast. With the other she kept the high collar over her mouth and cheeks. Pyne could only see her eyes, and the amazed light that leaped into them increased his astonishment at her unexpected presence.

"It seems to me," he answered, "that if you just walk up four more steps and sit down you can ask him all those things yourself."

"Very you speaking to him?"

"I did happen to mention you."

"And he said he knew me?"

"No, no, no. He said nothing of the sort. But, for mercy's sake, what mystery is there about it?"

"Mystery? None whatever. I was mistaken. I have never met him. I came down to explain that to him. Oh—"

She dived suddenly as the gallery door opened. Brandt caught a fleeting glimpse of her vanishing form.

"Who was that?" he asked.

Brandt found his pipe and was filling it with tobacco.

"Mrs. Vansittart," he answered.

"Paying her long deferred visit, I suppose. She chose a curious hour."

"So I thought. But she did pop her head in to tell you she didn't know you at all."

"Poor lady!" he said, "she is the rest of us, is perturbed. I am a little bit of a duffer myself. I imagine she is of a somewhat hysterical temperament."

"That's so," agreed Pyne.

There were puzzling discrepancies in Mrs. Vansittart's explanation of her untimely appearance. Evidently she did not expect to meet him there. She thought she would find the lighthouse keeper alone. The ready deduction presented itself that when she did encounter Brandt she did not wish any third person to be present at the interview.

That Constance's father had no cause to look at waters in the same light he was quite certain. Anyhow, it was not his affair, and he decided to trouble his head about Mrs. Vansittart's vagaries.

So the young philosopher lit his pipe and delivered a lecture on the sex.

And he said only consent when the noise of ascending footsteps drove her into the company of sorrowful women, who would nevertheless have forgotten some of their own woe did they but realize her greater anguish.

The arched shells of the Indian scallop have this lovely substance of brilliant thickness to be of use.

is my baby girl, now two weeks old," writes Mrs. J. Priest, of Webster City, Iowa. "She is a fine healthy babe and we are both doing nicely. I am still taking Cardui, and would not be without it in the house."

"They are rare," said Brandt.

"I suppose so. Indeed, I used to be a mere ideal of mine, with my fan books. But they exist, and they are worth looking for."

He waited, lest perhaps the other man should take the opportunity offered, but Brandt, for the twentieth time, was poring over the records of the day which followed the hurricane reported by a former keeper. The American pursued his lips.

"He had had a bad time with a woman once in his life," he mused. "It must have been Constance's mother, and that is why he doesn't believe in heredity. Well, I guess he's right."

Had he seen Mrs. Vansittart cowering on her knees outside her bedroom door, he might have found cause for more disturbing reflections. She was crying softly, with her face hidden in her hands.

"Oh, I dare not! I dare not!" she moaned. "I am the most miserable woman in the world. It would have been better if I had gone down with the vessel. The Lord saved me only to
